All required components are included and the descriptions are clear. I am assuming the fact you have to register to download files from the repository is acceptable (free, quick registration) given that it is listed as one of the recommended repositories.

In their manuscript, the Tjew-A-Sin, Schneider, and Koole provide and describe the data that were used in their Embodied Terror Management Paper published in Psychological Science. The authors should be commended for their work. These data sets have good reuse potential and everything seemed understandable from the SPSS data set. It appears that this data set satisfies the criteria of JoPD.
